very important on how to treat consumers.

It has opened my eyes and mind to things about dealing with people with disabilities that never occurred to me.

It has influenced my work by being more cognizant on the laws we must follow. Since, incorporating CFR directly it enhances the way I serve the consumers. Not that we didn't follow or cite the laws prior to the course but I have book marked a site containing 34 CFR Part 361.

Corresponding with the others in the group. I know how different it is with all Indian tribes across the this country, but the learning experience from each person who talks about how their tribe and reservations are is important. The interesting thing is, I see so much history still in these tribe and the on going struggles with government, my heart and voice wants to be heard a thousand time loud! So with the support and sharing ideas and/or theories maybe we can make a difference and help each other.

The material learned daily, the readings and what others from different TVR programs had to say.

Very informative --it has enhanced analytical skills with TVR.

The sound quality is not good. This is the first on-line course I have taken and I thought there wouldn't be any audio problems. I missed the very first class due to technical difficulties on-line and then the IT technician stated he would fix the problem and contact when it was fixed but he never did. I had to find out on my own whether I could get on-line or if there was still a problem. 2 times we were told there would be available work but it was not available. (There was some kind of glitch in the computer.) For example the second survey had to be resent yet it was reported during class but we had to ask again to be downloaded or sent. (This survey). Also, my list of homework that was due was inadvertently shown 2 times during class on the screen. I think that was a bad error on the instructors part. I don't know how something confidential could be broadcast like that. I realize it was a mistake to show it 2 times but perhaps it should have not been stored/save to a spot where it may be shown to others. Otherwise, I think the course is great, only if we could have taken this course upon starting our jobs. Thank you for providing all this great information so we can improve our service to our consumers and make our communities better places to live and work.
